Broadleaf Evergreens

Broadleaf evergreens are usually considered shade plants in this area because of the hot, dry summers and the cold, dry winters. If mulched and watered properly, during the entire year, many of these plants will grow well in full sun. Dehydration during the winter is the main cause of death among the broadleaf evergreens. By following a couple of easy steps each fall, you can have your plants survive the winter without any major problems. 1. Spray your plants with Wilt Prufe just before the weather gets real cold. 2. Mulch your tender plants with leaves, bark or Soil Pep. 3. Water your plants occasionally during the winter, if the temperature is warm and if there is not a good snow cover. Broad-leaved evergreens can help keep your yard looking colorful all year long.
